HIGHLIGHTS

- Icosavax closed a $51M deal to fund development of vaccines from artificial viruses. Icosavax is a Seattle-based company, spun out of the University of Washington, which uses computational protein design to create virus-like particles that cause the immune system to respond in defense. However, because these particles are not viruses, they are safe. Icosavax's first goal is to create a vaccine for the respiratory syncytial virus (RSV). (Geekwire)
- Health tech startup Twistle closed a $16M Series A funding round. Twistle is a software platform with an app that automates routine tasks such as patient communication and education which free providers to focus on higher priority work, ultimately decreasing costs. (Geekwire)
- The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation and the National Institute of Health have announced a commitment of $200M over a four year period to fund gene-based cures for HIV and sickle cell disease that can be delivered at low cost to people in developing countries. The Gates Foundation and the NIH hope to identify promising treatments and fund them through clinical trials. (Geekwire)
