AUGUST TOP TRANSACTIONS

Vilya broke onto the BioForest biotech scene with $50M in Series A proceeds. The company will use cutting-edge computational techniques to develop innovative drugs for difficult-to-treat diseases (BioSpace).

Monod Bio is moving offices after raising $25M in seed funding. Monod Bio currently works out of CoMotion at the University of Washington where the company was incubated but is moving to a new, 12,000-square-foot space in South Lake Union (Seattle Inno).

Alongside, new start up in Seattle with plans to partner with schools to support adolescent mental health through an app, has completed a $5.5M seed funding round. The app allows students to interact through a chatbot and guides them to resources like videos of other students experiencing similar issues (GeekWire).

OTHER TRENDS & HIGHLIGHTS

University of Washington (UW) now a new global ranking places it 17th in the world and third among US public universities. Hundreds of UW spinoff and startup companies employ thousands of people in Washington and they generate billions of dollars in economic activity (Seattle Times).

Life Sciences Developers exercise caution, but remain bullish on sector. Despite another slowdown in venture-capital funding in the second quarter, developers in the life-sciences space still feel largely confident about the lab real estate sector (Puget Sound Business Journal).

Sonoma Bio has leased an 83,000 square-foot research and development space in Seattle's Interbay area, with plans to nearly double its companywide headcount. The Seattle- and San Francisco-based biotech company develops therapies for autoimmune and inflammatory diseases (Puget Sound Business Journal).
